PSALM cii. 28.

THE CHILDREN OF THY SERVANTS SHALL CONTINUE ; AND THEIR SEED SHALL BE ESTABLISHED BE-FORE THEE.

THE reversionary blessing so expressly promised to the posterity of those, who should dedicate themselves to the service of God, although applied by the prophet, primarily, to the faithful under the Jewish Dispensation, may yet be considered as extending to those, who might be similarly circumstanced within the Christian Covenant. If they who were the Depositories of the antient Law, and were ordained to be Ministers at the Altar, as the servants of the Lord, enjoyed the assurance of God's favour towards their descendants, it will not be presumptuous to encourage the same hope in those engaged concerning the more glorious Ministration of the Gospel. The holy office is, in truth, no longer confined to one family divinely appointed : yet we may be justified in believing that, to the faithful discharge of the spiritual commission, derived from Christ and his Apostles, is annexed a recompense at least equal to that promised to the Levitical Priesthood. If this interpretation and application of the text be well founded, we deduce from the words of the Prophecy one of the most animating encouragements to the design of the present Assembly: and this excellent Institution appears to deserve the blessing of God, inasmuch as it is immediately carrying into effect the Divine Will, by providing a support for the Children of the Clergy employed in his service.

It may be presumed that an order of men so highly favoured as to enjoy not only the perpetual co-operation of the Supreme Being in their professional labours, but his blessing, even on their posterity, must be distinguished by services of the highest benefit to mankind. Let us investigate the excellence of the Ecclesiastical Office in itself, and its admirable effects in promoting the best interests of society: the necessity and importance of the Spiritual Functions of the Clergy; and the infinite advantages derived from their Temporal Labours. From the exact and assiduous discharge of their duty, we trust will be derived not only an esteem for the Office, but a respect for those who bear it; not only a ready acknowledgment of the Equity of those those moderate Emoluments, with which the state has endowed them, but a zeal, on this occasion, as instruments of the Divine Will, to extend our liberality to their descendants; that so the Children of those, who stand in so peculiar and honourable a relation to God, "may continue;" that the seed of that body of men, who have contributed so essentially towards establishing good order and happiness in the world, may receive a suitable and decent establishment.

That the Spiritual Office of the Clergy is both necessary and important is evident from Scripture and Reason: it is necessary; because positively enjoined by God: it is important, in the highest degree; inasmuch as the salvation of mankind, in a great measure, depends on it.

From the earliest period after the creation, it pleased the Almighty Creator to establish an intercourse between himself and his creatures. After the entrance of sin into the world, by the transgression of Adam, Man felt the necessity of frequently deprecating the wrath of his Maker: and we find Abel, Noah, and Abraham offering Sacrifices for their own offences, and for those of their respective families. On the first promulgation of a formal code of laws laws from Heaven, it pleased God to appoint an Order of Priests, whom He declared to be holy, to be consecrated to stand before Him, and to minister unto Him; and, by the same express authority, we learn what were their peculiar Rites, and Offices, and Recompence. In the revelation of the Gospel, we observe not, indeed, the same precision in marking the ceremonies of the office; but we know that our Saviour himself instituted the Christian Ministry; that those first appointed, and divinely inspired, are termed "Ambassadors of Heaven," and "Stewards of God's Mysteries;" and that even their successors are denominated "Angels," or Messengers of the Grace of the Most High.

Nor is the importance of the Spiritual Functions of the Clergy less manifest than their necessity. It is, indeed, agreeable to the truest ideas of the Supreme Being, all wise and good, to believe that they were instituted by Him; because he knew them to be essential to the happiness of his creatures. If it be of the utmost moment for the weak and corrupted nature of Man to be informed concerning the will of God, and incited to the performance of it, then may that office be justly declared important, the duties of which consist in teaching pure Religion, and exhorting

exhorting to the belief and practice of it ; in warning the Inconsiderate, and reproofing the Obstinate ; in unremitting vigilance, by precept and example, to conduct men to holiness and virtue. They who are appointed to execute it are termed “ Shepherds of the Flock of Christ,” “ Labourers in his vineyard,” “ Builders of the Temple of God ;” metaphorical terms, indeed, from humble occupations ; but such as imply great care and assiduity, and which, when applied to a concern which has Eternity for its object, assume much dignity and elevation. The end of all their labours is the salvation of the people, and for this end were they ordained : and although every Individual is commanded to work out his own salvation, yet so powerful are the attractions of the world, the tumult of business, or the fascination of pleasure, that men will always stand in need of an Order to assist them in collecting religious knowledge, and impressing it on their hearts. If future happiness be an object worth attention, whither shall the bulk of the people, the weak, the ignorant, the busy, the dissipated, be directed, but to those, by whose studies they may be instructed concerning spiritual things, and incited to obtain the high prize of their calling ? Happy are the effects which the pious labours of the Clergy are observed to have in removing the religious ignorance, and checking the wickedness of mankind! An office involving such Duties cannot but be of the highest importance. The communication with the Supreme Being, by prayer and intercession, at the throne of grace, for the sins of the people, is the most sublime of all employments: the cultivation of immortal souls the most sacred of all trusts: the preparing them for that state of everlasting joy, of which they are capable, the most momentous service that man can bestow on man.

But if the faithful and assiduous discharge of the Spiritual Duties of the Clergy be of infinite utility in promoting the eternal interests of mankind, great advantage is also derived from the attention of this order of men to the Temporal Comforts of society. Man, persuaded by the Gospel of his responsibility, and taught how he may secure, through the intercession of a merciful Redeemer, a state of everlasting happiness, is most becomingly and beneficially employed in endeavouring to obtain the favour of Heaven: but he is by no means required to be so absorbed in spiritual duties, as to neglect the concerns of this world: his nature and his necessities, indeed, forbid such total abstraction. This state, in which he has a probationary existence, involving personal interests and relative obligations, must ever claim a considerable share of his attention. On the due provision for the body, the cultivation of the moral principle, the acquisition and extension of knowledge, the good order and harmony of society, much of his happiness in this life must depend. In prudent attention to the temporal necessities of mankind, the Clergy of this country have been, and continue to prove themselves eminently beneficial: to their zeal to promote the secular, as well as spiritual welfare of those committed to their charge may be attributed, in a considerable degree, the cheerful and contented appearance of the bulk of the people. The poor, indeed, are, in a peculiar manner, the objects of ecclesiastical care and tenderness: solicitude for their temporal comfort is required both by the express injunction of our Saviour, and the re-iterated admonition and example of his Apostles: and although the humane laws of this country provide great support for the Indigent from the property of the Wealthy; yet the judicious distribution of it, according to real merit and necessity, is generally best regulated and determined by the advice of the Parochial Minister. To such as pine in secret want, unable, from various circumstances, to ask relief from the public stock, the opportunities of private intercourse which the Clergy enjoy enable them to afford assistance, either from the little they can usually give of their own, or from the alms, which the more Opulent have entrusted to their discretion.

But, if attention to, and relief of the temporal necessities of the poor so strongly characterize the discharge of the Pastoral Office throughout this country, our Order is not less conspicuous, and has certainly not a weaker claim on the gratitude of the public, for its unremitted zeal in the cultivation of Morals, and the dissemination of Learning. On these two important particulars depend, in a great measure, the happiness of Individuals, and the good order of the Community. Without Morals, founded on Christian Principles, and resulting from Christian Motives, the Laws of the State would prove, in many instances, insufficient. Without the cultivation of Learning, the mind must either sink into torpid indolence, or break forth into acts of savage barbarity. To the studies of our Clergy is to be referred, in a principal degree, the intellectual eminence which distinguishes us among other nations: studies principally, indeed, though by no means exclusively, directed to subjects relating to their own profession; but embracing likewise the whole circle of the liberal Arts and Sciences. The beneficial result of these is to be found in the numerous Volumes by which they have instructed and delighted the world; in Philological Researches, or Criticism, in History, in Philosophy, in Ethics; or, descending from the higher walks of Literature, in works of genius, and elegant imagination. And, in truth, the public opinion of the importance and fitness of the Clergy for disseminating Learning has not only placed them at the head of our public Institutions for Education, but created an almost universal desire of obtaining their assistance for the same purpose in private families: so that it may be asserted, without fear of incurring the censure of exaggeration, that the National Character, as to Morals, Literature, and Taste, results principally from the extensive Knowledge, and preceptive Labours of our Clergy.

The last instance I shall mention of temporal utility derived from that Order of Men, for whose cause I stand here no unwilling advocate, is the Patriotism with which they undertake, and the Ability which usually marks their execution of the administration of Justice in their respective neighbourhoods. The office of Magistrate is of great responsibility, highly conducive to the support of our excellent Constitution, requiring some knowledge of Jurisprudence, much Vigilance, an acute insight into human nature, nature, patience in investigation, and firmness of decision. Where can such a Trust be with more safety and more advantage reposed, than with the parochial Ministers of this country? Their education, and their professional habits qualify them, in an eminent degree, for the post; and great surely is the debt of gratitude which their country owes them, in the present times especially, for such a sacrifice of their private leisure to the difficult, laborious, and invidious task of curbing the Licentious.

I shall not detain you by dwelling on the infinite benefit derived to Society from the precept and example of our Clergy in promoting friendly sentiments, and kind offices among the lower orders of the people; in establishing funds from the produce of labour, as a provident support for the seasons of Disease, or Age; in preventing, or adjusting Differences by arbitration; in affording prudent advice concerning the testamentary disposal of Property. The time would fail me to enumerate the very abundant particulars, in which the manners and the happiness of the people of this Country are improved by the conscientious and diligent discharge of the Clerical Office.

You

You have now before you collected the principal features, which mark the high importance of the Ecclesiastical Character and Duties, as we happily see them exemplified throughout these kingdoms, both in a Spiritual and Temporal point of view; as they interest the Individual, and as they affect Society. If to qualify men for immortal happiness hereafter, and also to conduce to their comforts in this world; if to purify the Heart, and cultivate the Understanding; if to combine the qualities of the Patriot with those of the Theologist, be occupations which may challenge admiration, and command respect; then might we confidently hope that the public sense of such important services would be substantially and liberally expressed. Recompense should be justly apportioned to Desert. The State, in its wisdom, has allotted a provision for the established Ministry of this country, the total amount of which, it may be safely asserted, does not exceed the value of their services: and if the professional income of the Parochial Clergy be estimated, in its subdivided proportions to individuals, it will appear to be often lamentably inadequate to the habits of a Liberal Education, to the appearance expected from their station, and to the real necessities of their families.

It needs not be dissembled that among this class of men, there are some who do not bestow so minute an attention on oeconomic arrangements, as the scantiness of their support, and the frequent demands from it, may seem, in prudence, to require. Let not the enemies of our Establishment reflect scornfully on its Ministers for such instances of infirmity. Habits of study, and abstraction are apt to render the mind inattentive to pecuniary concerns. The liberal Provision, to which most of us are early accustomed in our Universities, requiring little or no provident care on our parts, renders us ill qualified, when called out into the world, to regulate the expenditure of a family with arithmetical precision. Embarrassments from such causes seem rather calculated to excite Pity, than to provoke Indignation. Yet, if it be harshly urged that they are sometimes known to originate from ostentation, from intemperance, or habits of dissipation, unbecoming the Clerical Character, we may confidently reply that instances of delinquency in these respects are rare; that the judicious will never fail to discriminate between Inadvertence and Guilt; that however justly the criminally Profuse of our Order may themselves merit Censure and Contempt, such indignation ought not to operate to the detriment of their innocent and suffering Descendants.

ed But, even, under the strongest impression of the moderate amount, and precarious nature of his Professional Income, and the most prudent Administration of it, the Parochial Clergyman must often find it difficult to supply the annual demands for the support of a numerous family, and to preserve that becoming appearance, to which the people attribute respect. If this be a subject of frequent mortification to his mind, a mind rendered more susceptible by his Education and Habits; if the present be embittered by solicitude for the supply it is constantly requiring; with what additional apprehension must he anticipate the future condition of his Widow and Children! For these it is evident he can make no provision! In such seasons of dejection, the pious resignation and confidence in God, which he has so assiduously taught to others, will prove his best support. He trusts, in the words of the text, that "the children of God's servants shall continue, and that their seed shall be established before Him." He has eminently served the public, by promoting their dearest and most valuable interests, their temporal and eternal welfare. When he is called hence to receive the reward of a life, so piously and beneficially employed, he leaves his Children to experience the protection and support of those, who entertain a due sense of their Father's merits. He knows that God, to whom the best part of his life has been dedicated, is "the Father of the fatherless, and the Protector of the widow." He relies on the established character for Liberality, which has ever distinguished his Countrymen; for their attachment to the cause of their Religion, and their respect for its Ministers; and to the guardianship of such generous Principles he bequeaths his destitute offspring.

That this confidence in the remunerative Gratitude of the nation towards the indigent Children of our Order is well founded, let the liberal benefactions on this day fully demonstrate. We have witnessed, during many years, and we here gratefully acknowledge, the zeal with which the higher Ranks have pressed forward to countenance and support this benevolent work. On the two preceding Solemnities, and on the present, the public observe, with lively satisfaction, the test of reverence and affection which those nearest to the Throne bear to our sacred Religion, and to the Children of its Ministers*. The example is brilliant, and we trust will produce the happiest effects, not only by immediately promoting the interests of this excellent Institution, but by shewing how Eminence of station is most adorned by acts of Piety and Beneficence.

* Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, and the Duke of Clarence have successively honoured this Institution by discharging the office of Stewards. The Prince of Wales and Duke of Clarence were present on this occasion.

And, beyond all doubt, the motive that now assembles us is pious and benevolent in the highest degree; to wipe away the tear from the cheek of suffering innocence; to mitigate the pangs which those must feel, who are at once plunged, from a situation of ease and comparative refinement, into the depths of penury; to remove some of the anxiety which it is natural for many of our Clergy to suffer for the future provision of their children; and, by these means, to leave their minds in full vigour and activity to prosecute their Studies, and discharge the Duties of their holy Profession, for the advantage and comfort of the world. Objects so consistent with the true spirit of our Religion, and so conducive to the welfare of Society, may justly claim the best attention of an enlightened people.

Consider then, to sum up all, that the Cause we plead is that of the Ministers of Christ, men worthy of veneration “for their works’ sake;” the Expounders of the Will of God; the Guides, both by precept and example, to everlasting happiness; happiness; the national Preceptors of our Youth in Morals and Literature; themselves the ready Dispensers of those Alms to others, which are now so earnestly solicited for their indigent Offspring at your hands. Prove yourselves therefore, on this occasion, instrumental in fulfilling the Prophecy of my text, “that the Children of God’s Servants shall continue, and their Seed be established before Him.”

Now to God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be ascribed all might, majesty, and dominion for ever and ever! AMEN.

Consider then, to turn up all, that the Cause we plead is that of the Ministers of Christ, men worthy of veneration “for their works sake;” the Exponents of the Will of God; the Guides, both by precept and example, to everlasting happiness;

POOR ORPHANS OF CLERGYMEN.

A SOCIETY OF STEWARDS AND SUBSCRIBERS FOR MAINTAINING AND EDUCATING POOR ORPHANS OF CLERGYMEN 'TILL OF AGE TO BE PUT APPRENTICE, was formed in the Year 1749. The Establishment happily increasing as it became more generally known, has now attained a considerable Degree of Prosperity: and it cannot be doubted but the same liberal Support will be continued to it, with even additional Assistance, when it is known that such is still wanting to enable the Society to afford full Relief to all the Objects intended to be benefitted by it.

This Society, since its Institution, has received into its Schools more than 550 Children of both Sexes; most of whom have been placed out as Apprentices to useful Employments, and are thereby provided with the Means of becoming serviceable to themselves and to the Community. It has now near One Hundred poor Orphans under its fostering Protection: but from the great Increase in the Number of late admitted into its Schools, and the vast Advance in the Price of every Article of Consumption, and a Failure in some of the usual Subscriptions, its Expences during the Year 1800 exceeded its Income more than 500*l*. and the Society is now unfortunately compelled to restrain the Number to be received under its Care; whereby several deserving Objects are for the present excluded from partaking of its Benefits and Assistance.

Surely

Surely nothing can be more congenial to the Feelings of the benevolent and sympathising Mind than to afford Maintenance, Education and Protection to the poor helpless Orphans of necessitous and indigent Clergymen.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and BENEFACTIONS to this humane and excellent Institution are thankfully received by JOHN TOPHAM, Esq. No. 10, Bedford-Row, London, Treasurer; where the Constitutions, Regulations and Order of the Charity may be seen.
